Nominations to be Held December 6th

As the nominations to fill the various civic offices will be held one week from next Monday—December 6th—it is time that the ratepayers were considering who they would like to have in command of the city's affairs during the next year.

The mayor and aldermen are completing a very successful term, as the city is in a better position financially, than it has ever been, and the citizens owe a debt of gratitude to the men who have formed the council during the past year. Those who automatically retire from the council at the end of the year are Mayor Montgomery, and Aldermen Chandler, Brown and Gothard, and it is generally expected that they will all stand for reelection. Aldermen Scott, Purker and Paton have another year to serve.

The personnel of the public school board will be changed next year, as Wm. Berry has tendered his resignation, and we understand C. B. MacEachern will not be a candidate for reelection. The other members retiring automatically this year are Dr. MacEachern and Dr. McCollan, and it is likely they will both be ready to serve another term on nomination day. Bill Moore is the only member of the board who is now elected to serve as trustee for 1937.

Curt Smith, R. B. Schmidt and Sam Baxter retire automatically as members of the Sacred Heart Separate school board, while P. J. Kucior and A. P. Moon have another year to serve. Now is the time to act if Wetaskiwin is to have the best men, or women, placed in nomination on December 6th.

Why a
Board of Trade

The following address was recently given before the Innisfail Board of Trade by John Blue, secretary of the Edmonton Board and provincial government librarian. It is taken from the Innisfail Province, and forms worthy reading for all live business men.

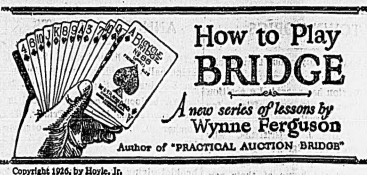

Mr. Blue took as the subject for his address "Why a Board of Trade?" and if there were any doubts as to the necessity of a board, when the address was over they could not help but be convinced that a board of trade was a most necessary institution in any live town.

In opening his address the speaker asked "Why any institution? Why a town council? Why a school board? Why a church? Because they fill a necessary place in the organization and maintenance of the social life of a community. The powers and functions of the council, school board, or church organizations are circumscribed by legal limitations. There was need in every community of community leadership. Organized government is not sufficient; there was need of some unofficial organization—unlimited by charter or statutes but expressing and embodying the spirit of the community education, social life, hospitals, music, sport, business. A successful community has all these and a board of trade brings the ability of the business men to bear on all these problems.

A good business man is the best asset of a community. Business builds a community, and the function of business is to provide wealth and distribute it for the comfort and happiness of mankind. To accomplish this the business man needs rare ability involving self-sacrifice. He must be a faucler, a merchant, establish and maintain a good reputation, trade with everybody and still make money.

The board of trade is the best training ground for the study of the needs of the community. Are you interested in your town? Do you want business to flourish in the district? Then study the community, study its problems, and bring to bear on these the best you have to offer. Your town does not consist of the streets and homes within its boundaries, but that influence that radiates from within its borders to the furthestmost tributary district. A board of trade must bring together the town and surrounding country. The business man must so treat his customers as to bring about a harmony of purpose towards the upbuilding of the town and district. The farmer must feel the necessity to him of the town and the townsman must feel the need of the country, and merchants must assume leadership in establishing the best of friendly terms between town and country and offer sympathetic cooperation in all their problems, for after all, we are all farmers, we are all producers of the farm know we are going. Carry on your business on a sound basis. Business cannot exist on cut prices, but service will win friends and the confidence of the community.

One of the strongest links in the chain which will bind the town and country together is good roads. The history of the development of the

ARTICLE No. 4

One of the most interesting hands that the writer has come across in a long time was published recently, with the request that the proper bidding of all four hands be given. It is as follows:

Hearts—9
Clubs—none
Diamonds—10, 7
Spades—10, 7

Hearts—A, K, Q, J, 8, 7, 6
Clubs—A, K, Q, J, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3
Diamonds—A, K, Q, J, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3
Spades—A, K, Q, J, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3

Hearts—6, 5, 4
Clubs—10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3
Diamonds—10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3
Spades—8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3

No score, first game, Z deals and passes. What is A's proper bid and the natural continuation of the bidding? A should bid one club but with the firm intention of bidding spades on the next round if the opportunity is offered. It is appropriate only a freak hand all around and if A finds five spades in an opponent's hand is satisfied in diamonds, and once he may not be able to make game. For that reason, one club seems the better opening bid with A's hand (one spade). When A bids one club, Y is in a position where he wants to shut out any information about hearts or spades, so should bid five diamonds. B is in a position where he can safely bid two spades because of A's bid of one club, showing that in that suit, Z must pass. A is confronted with the problem of bidding six clubs, five spades or passing. Either bid is sound but the pass seems the better judgment. Next to passing six clubs is the best bid. What ever A does, Y should bid six diamonds. The bidding should indicate to him that A-B have an overwhelming hand and it is up to him to save the game, if possible, at the expense of not more than 500 points less his honor score. B should now bid six hearts to show Z that the five heart bid was sound. Z should now pass and Y, in the writer's opinion, should bid seven diamonds. His maximum loss is 300 points less 50 honors, or a net loss of 250 points. He also has the chance that if A-B overbid with seven hearts that Z would open a club. It is a foregone conclusion that either A or B is void of diamonds and the fact that Z has four clubs and the knowledge that there are other void suits around the table would influence a sharp player to open clubs. With any other opening, A-B would make seven hearts. A-B can also make seven clubs with any opening so that Y's bid of seven diamonds was a good sacrifice.

The test hands given in the preceding article caused a wide difference of opinion, and the writer's own analysis varied from the writer's.

Answer to Problem No. 2

Hearts—7
Clubs—8, 4
Diamonds—A, K, Q, J, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3
Spades—J, 10, 4, 3

Rubber game, no score. Z dealt and bid one diamond. A bid two clubs, Y passed and B bid four clubs. With this pretty new bid Z should pass. His partner Y wasn't even able to bid two diamonds over two clubs so must have a pretty weak hand. If Z bids four diamonds, he is sure to get doubled and lose at least 400 points. In the actual game, Z did bid four diamonds, was doubled and lost 500 points—a pretty severe penalty for such bad bidding.

Answer to Problem No. 3

Hearts—6
Clubs—7, 4
Diamonds—9, 8
Spades—A, K, J, 10, 7, 5, 4, 3

Rubber game, Y-Z, 10; A-B, 21. What would you bid if you dealt and held Z's hand? When Z looked his hand over, he thought to himself, "I can make two or three spades with this hand but no way unless my partner has a big hand in which case we are in no danger anyway. If, however, he has a big hand, how I get the bid and let him have it cheaply as possible. There's only one way to accomplish that, by concealing the spade strength and endeavoring to make my opponents think I have an entirely different type of hand." With this idea in view, Z opened the bidding with one heart. A bid one no-trump, Y bid two hearts and B bid two no-trump. Z was in a position to pass and try to defeat the two no-trump bid by his partner would surely open hearts. Z, therefore, bid three spades, hoping that A-B would not overbid him. As a matter of fact, they doubled and here's where Z was lucky. His partner also passed, although he held five hearts to the ace and only three spades to the ten. He was a sharp player, however, and figured that Z must be trying some stunt or he wouldn't bid three spades over two no-trump, after he held the heart bid, unless B had a very good guess, so he trusted Z and passed. Y-Z made three spades in this hand, whereas A-B had five old either in clubs or in diamonds. Z's trick bid in this case was well thought out and well supported by his partner. Such trick bidding is not recommended, but is given as an interesting instance of a clever departure from normal bidding.

Answer to Problem No. 4

Hearts—Q, 10, 4
Clubs—10, 5
Diamonds—A
Spades—K, Q, 10, 9, 8, 6, 3

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no-trump. A passed, Y bid two spades and B passed. Z bid two no-trump and A passed. What should Y now bid? Y should bid three spades. Z's bid of two no-trump should inform Y that Z has only two little spades or a singleton, but that he has high cards in the other three suits. With Y's length in spades and such an unbalanced hand, he should stand a better chance for game in spades than in no-trump. The object of all sound bidding is to get the best bid for 26 or 28, not for 13. Remember this advice and if you can give additional information of a sound character by following your suit, don't hesitate to do so.

ROSS' SUCCESSOR
IS A U. F. A. MAN

Calgary, Nov. 20.—The retirement of Hon. Alex. Ross from the U.F.A. government as minister of public works will be officially announced within a short time.

Premier J. B. Brownlee will not resign until after the close of the 1937 session of the legislature.

As nearly as can be ascertained, these two main conclusions were arrived at during the course of a lengthy caucus of U.F.A. members of the legislature with Premier Brownlee and other cabinet members here Thursday afternoon.

Members in attendance at the caucus maintain the most rigid silence regarding the questions discussed and the understanding arrived at, but it is understood that a decision to accept the resignation of Mr. Ross was reached and that the premier gave assurance that he would not retire from the party leadership without giving his followers ample notice. It is believed that the premier reserved the right to relinquish the position at such a time as he deemed advisable, indicating that he is seriously considering accepting the general management of the wheat pool, probably soon after the close of the next session of the legislature.

It is evident, from the attitude of U.F.A. members now in the city, that there was no possibility of any member resigning and making the seat available to Hon. Alex. Ross.

Options seem to be divided among U.F.A. members as to who the successor of Mr. Ross will be. While O. L. McPherson is recognized as one of the strongest members of the government, it is pointed out that his time is now largely occupied with about pool matters and that he can best fit these duties to the position of speaker of the legislative assembly.

The name of Milton C. McKee, of Lac Ste. Anne, and deputy speaker of the house, is coming to the fore as a prospective minister of public works, but so far as can be learned there was no conclusive discussion of this matter at the caucus.

Drink Hot Water With Meals to Stop Stomach Disorders

WHAT PHYSICIANS ADVISE

Thousands of unfortunate people suffer almost daily from dyspepsia, indigestion, fermentation, sour, acid stomach, flatulence, gases or distress after eating. If they would only form the agreeable habit of slowly drinking after each meal a glassful of hot water containing a teaspoonful of two tablets of Bismarck Magnesia they would soon find their stomachs so strengthened and improved that they could eat the richest and most satisfying meals without the least symptom of indigestion.

Nearly all so called digestive troubles are caused by an excess of acid and an insufficient food supply. In the stomach, causing the food to ferment and sour before digestion can take place. A glass of hot water will draw the blood up to the stomach and the Bismarck Magnesia will neutralize the stomach acids and make the food contents bland and sweet. Easy, natural digestion without distress of any kind is the result. Bismarck Magnesia is not a laxative, is harmless, pleasant and easy to take and can be obtained from any reputable druggist. Do not confuse Bismarck Magnesia with other forms of magnesia—milk, citrates, etc., but get it in the pure Bismarck form (powder or tablets) especially prepared for this purpose. 61

(but it was in the dark really), and am no more worthy to be called any thing but what I am."

No one knows the shame I feel, not even me; and, by the time you get this, I shall be well on my way to—where am I going?

Will you please tell Aunt that Michael's noble and beautiful action has wounded my heart, and I wish he had wounded my neck. I cannot let him take the blame for me, like this. I shall write to her from Town.

When you find yourself in the witness box or prisoner's box, tell the Beak that you have always known me to be weak but not vicious, and that my downfall has been due to smoking cigarettes and going in for newspaper competitions. Also that you are sure that, if given time, I shall redeem myself by hard work, earn thirty shillings a week at least, and return the thirty thousand pounds out of my savings.

Write and let me know how things go on, as soon as I send you an address—which you will, of course, keep to yourself. Give my love to Isabel.

Play up and don't forget you've got to stand by me and make people believe that I am actually the thief—or suspect still rests on Claudia (since Isabel and Gussie are out of it). If we three do not provide the criminal amongst us. And, of course, I can't let Beau suffer for me.

Directly you hear from him, let him know by wire that I have confessed and begged, and that he can return to Brandon Abbas and admit he was shielding the real culprit (whom he knew to be me or you or Claudia).
Give my love to Isabel. Ever thine—
Digby."

For a moment this drove even Is-bel from my mind.
It had never occurred to me, for one moment that Digby had actually fled, as Michael had done. Could it be possible that he was speaking the truth in the letter?

If I dived on me, or rather it was stabbed into my heart suddenly, as with a knife, that it was quite as much my affair to help in preventing suspicion, just or unjust, from falling upon Claudia; and that if they could face obloquy, poverty, hardship, and general wrecking of their lives for Claudia and for me and for each other—why, so could I for them, and that it was my duty to go too.

Moreover, when detectives and criminal experts got to work on the case, they would be quite capable of saying that there was nothing to prevent Isabel and Augustus from being in collusion to prove each other innocent, and would suspect one or both of them the more.

To us, who knew her, it was completely proven that Augustus was innocent, because she said so.

To a detective, it would more probably be a clue to the guilty person—the "evidence" which incidentally precluded her own innocence.

Moreover, the wretched Augustus had most undoubtedly been surprised when Isabel said he must be innocent as she had been holding on to him all the time the light was out. If this came out, it would certainly fix the suspicion on Isabel, and if it did not there was a strong probability that her declaration concerning Augustus would, as I have said, suggest collusion between them.

The more reason then for me to strengthen the declaration—that the thief was one of the Gestes.

If three people fled confessing their guilt, that was where the collusion would be—among the three rascally brothers who had plotted to rob their relative and share the spoil.

That the oldest had weakened and fled first, was to his credit, or not, according to whether you more admired courage or confession; but obviously and incontestably the blame must be upon those three, and not among those who remained at home and faced the music.

"But," said the voices of prudence, courage, and common sense, as well as the voice of love, "two are enough to take the blame, surely? Let people say it was one of those two, or perhaps the two in partnership."

"And why," replied the voices of self-respect and pride, "should those two share the blame (or honour)? Why should they shield Isabel and you, as well as Claudia, from suspicion," and to the latter voice I listened.

I could not possibly sit at home and enjoy life while the Captain and Lieutenant were in trouble, disgrace, and danger—my whole life-training, as well as instincts, forbade.

I think that within two minutes of reading Digby's letter, the question of my going was quite definitely answered and only the minor question of when I should go, and whether I should say anything to Isabel, remained to be settled. And one of these two problems was subconsciously solved, though I had not intentionally considered it and come to a decision.

From the moment that I had learnt of Michael's flight, I had had somewhere, just below the level of consciousness, a vague remembrance of the existence of a romantic-sounding adventurous corps of soldiers of fortune, called the French Foreign Legion.

When thinking of Michael, and seeing mental pictures of him in the addressing of Brandon Abbas, our "Prep" school, Eton and Oxford, one of the clearest of the dissolving views had been of a group of us in the bow, at the feet of a smart and debonaire young French officer, who had thrilled us with dramatic tales of Algeria, Morocco, and the Sahara; tales of Spanish, Turcos, Zouaves, Chasseurs d'Afrique, and the French Foreign Legion of Mercenaries; tales of hot life and brave death, of battle and of victory. At the end Michael had said:

"I shall join the French Foreign Legion when I leave Eton. Get a commission and join into his regiment," and Digby and I had applauded the plan.

Had Michael remembered this, and had he, even now, on his way to this life of adventure and glory, determined to win his way to soldierly reward and a nom de guerre? It would be so like Michael.

And Digby? Had he the same idea and followed him? It was so like Digby.

And? Should I follow my brothers' lead, asking nothing better than to do as they did, and win their approval? It would be so like me.

Three romantic young asses? I can smile at them now. Asses without a doubt; wild asses of the wildest; but still, with the imagination and the soul to be romantic asses, thank God!

As compensation for a smaller share of the gifts of courage, cleverness, and general distinction possessed by my brilliant brothers, I have been vouchsafed a larger measure of prudence and caution—though some may think that still does not amount to much.

I have met few men to equal Is-bel and Digby in beauty, physical strength, courage and intelligence; but I was, in spite of being an equally incurably romantic, "longer-headed" than they, and even more muscular and powerful. This is tremendous praise to award myself, but facts are facts.

Having decided to join them in disgrace and blame, as well as to join them in the flesh if I could—going to the Legion to look for them in the first place—I settled down to consider details, ways, and means.

I can think better in the dark, so I knocked out my pipe, burnt Digby's letter, and went up to bed.

The first task to face, and it loomed largest and most discouraging of all, was separation from Isabel! The very moment of finding her. Paradoxically, however, the very excitement of this wonderful thing that had happened, this finding of her, carried me along and gave me the power to leave her.

I was tele-matic, beside myself, and above myself, abnormal.

I would show my love that I, too, could do a fine thing, and could make a personal sacrifice to ward off from women, one of whom was mine, "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," outrageous suspicion and annoyance.

To leave her would be miseryl inspeachable—but what a miseryl misery and poignantly delightful sorrow for the heart of romantic youth to beg to find it.

Also I knew that it would be quite all right.

THE STORY OF JOSEPH MARTIN

The story of Mr. Joseph Martin of St. Ursula, P.Q. reads like a modern miracle. His was an unusually bad case of indigestion. In his own words he writes, "For about ten years I could not digest my food. For a year I could not work. I had no strength and I could hardly eat. I was like dead. Now I work and eat as much as I like and feel like a new man. Your 'Fruit-a-lives' have relieved me completely, and I would have died without your remedy. I am thankful to you, as you have saved a martyr of dyspepsia." (Signed) Joseph Martin.

Despite reduction of taxation, Canadian government revenues to August 31 were $7,000,000 greater than for the corresponding period of 1925.

The greatest asset that any manufacturer can enjoy is the good-will of the public. Public good-will made the Ford a leader among automobiles many years ago and has kept it there ever since. This good-will is the public's tribute to the inherent quality of Ford products. In that time the Ford coupe has become the world's most popular personal car. It embodies every essential quality of dependable transportation—lightness with sturdiness, comfort with compactness, and wide utility with remarkable economy. Its popularity has been won on performance. Selection of two body colors in durable lacquer—moleskin and gray.
